The Star Treatment

Being a good mother is the hardest job in the world. Offering that special mum the star treatment for a day is a great gift. Start with allowing her to sleep in. As if that weren't gift enough, breakfast in bed and cleaning the house is just what the mum ordered. Lunch and dinner preparation should be included along with bathing, feeding and dressing the children. Basically don't allow her to lift a finger. Supply a good book or time for her to do what she wants. What mother wouldn't want a day to recuperate?

Night Out

All mothers would surely appreciate a night out of the house with some adult conversation and atmosphere. It's a simple request, yet such a grand gesture for those mums who just want an evening as an adult. This works well with the morning and afternoon spent with the children. That is what Mother's Day is about in the first place.

Flowers and Plants

This is the most common of Mother's Day gifts. It's the obvious choice for that bouquet lover or for a very picky person.

Digital Camera

For the new mum, this makes a great gift. Children grow up so fast, catching those fleeting moments are important. With scrap booking becoming so popular, digital cameras also make a great gift for the scrapbook lover.

Jewellery

A great idea would be to give Mum a pendant with a picture of her child/ren in it or a bracelet, ring or necklace with the birthstone/s of children or grandchildren. If you are handy with a needle and thread, get some fine silk and cross stitch a design into a keyring, pendant or coaster (available at craft stores).

Spa Day

Most mothers I know could use a spa day. Whether her children are at home or have long since moved out, a spa day is a great choice. Spa days range from a whole package of all the goodies like mud baths and lunch or just a half hour of massage. Can't afford a spa? Create your own at home – clean the bath, arrange some candles and fluffy towels, some bubbles, moisturisers, and an hour of peace and quiet for mum.
